

Are you as financially stable as you think you are?

We often think if we just made more money, everything in our lives would be perfect.

A six or seven figure salary can give a false sense of wealth. You may not be as financially stable as you think you are if:

- You rely on bonus income to pay for essential expenses.
- You pay for vacations and holidays with a credit card and it takes more than 2 months to pay off.
- You don't have even a paycheck's worth of money in a savings account.
- You get thrown off when an intermittent expense arises like property tax or semi-annually paid car insurance.
- You're six years into your career and still aren't maximizing your 401(k) or saving 15% for retirement.
- You're five years into your career and feel you're still living paycheck to paycheck.

If you answered yes to even one of the questions above, you may be making good money, but still lack the good money habits to ensure your financial stability. The good news is that you can take specific steps to get there. Whether you are just starting out or well into your career, living a Savvy Life starts with:

- Knowing where you stand financially.
- Having clear goals on how you want to spend and save your money.
- Identifying and implementing the habits and behaviors that will get you there.

The Savvy Life specializes in helping individuals and families define the life they want to live and crafting the tools and habits to get them there.
